

Alyssa Benalfew-Ramos (she/hers) is a dynamic public policy professional and public health practitioner. Currently she is the Chief of Policy at the Black Economic Council of Massachusetts (BECMA), leading the development and implementation of BECMA's statewide policy and legislative advocacy strategy with the goal of building wealth and promoting prosperity in Black communities.

Prior to working at BECMA, Alyssa spent over five years working for the Boston Public Health Commission, most recently in the Executive Office. She has managed federal grants and trained over a thousand local stakeholders and advocates on the topics of trauma-informed approaches, domestic violence, racial equity, and organizational change.

She received her Master of Public Health degree in Health Policy & Law from Boston University, with a contextual certificate in Social Justice, Human Rights, and Health Equity. She has a bachelor's in Political Philosophy and Public Policy from the University of Massachusetts Boston. Alyssa is also a graduate-level adjunct professor and enjoys cooking, lounging on the beach, and playing basketball in her spare time.
