

Kama Bethel Pierce serves as Chief Program Officer at the National Center for Civil and Human Rights, guiding the Center's exhibitions, education work, and public programming—including be part of its recent ambitious expansion. With a career spanning museums, the practice of law, higher education, and nonprofit leadership, Kama is known for bringing history to life and connecting communities through bold, inclusive storytelling. She is the curator of Broken Promises: The Legacy of Reconstruction, the Center's new permanent exhibition which opened in December 2025.

A former law professor and academic dean, public defender, and museum Chief Operating Officer, Kama draws on three decades of cross-sector leadership to help institutions imagine what justice, memory, and learning can look like today. She lives in Atlanta and is a graduate of Georgetown University and Northwestern University School of Law.