

Abigail Abhaer Adekunbi Thomas is a climate justice advocate with over six years working on communications, grassroots mobilization, research, and equitable policy advocacy across nonprofit, academic, diplomatic, and business sectors. Her experience includes working at the African Union, Patagonia, Yale Center for Environmental Justice, Yale Program on Climate Change Communication, and The Chisholm Legacy Project. She has also served as a founding council member to Intersectional Environmentalist, a member of the World Economic Forum's Global Youth Hub for #GenerationRestoration, and has written several climate research pieces and book contributions. She holds a B.A. in Environmental Studies and Business Studies from New York University and an M.E.M., specializing in People, Equity, and the Environment from Yale School of the Environment.