

Imani Rupert-Gordon is the President of the National Center for LGBTQ Rights (NCLR), one of the nation's leading legal advocacy organizations working to advance the civil and human rights of LGBTQ people and their families.

Imani brings nearly two decades of visionary leadership to the movement for justice. Prior to joining NCLR, she served as Executive Director of Affinity Community Services, a Chicago-based social justice organization centering Black LGBTQ women. She also led the Broadway Youth Center at Howard Brown Health, providing life-saving support to LGBTQ youth experiencing housing instability. A nationally respected voice on LGBTQ rights, racial equity, and gender justice, Imani has been recognized for her impact and innovation across sectors. She is regularly featured in national media including The Washington Post, The Los Angeles Times, NPR, ABC, CBS, and Fox, offering critical insights on the intersectional issues shaping our time.

Imani holds a Master's degree in Social Work from the University of Chicago's Crown Family School and a Bachelor's degree in Sociology from the University of California, Santa Barbara.
