

Monica Tibbits Nutt is a nationally recognized transportation leader with more than two decades of experience advancing planning centered on equity, accountability, and public trust. A first generation college graduate, she served as Massachusetts Secretary of Transportation and became the first Black woman to lead the Massachusetts Department of Transportation. Her leadership focused on justice based planning, fare equity initiatives, data driven decision making, and new approaches to suburban mobility. She helped reshape transportation governance and expand access to opportunity across the Commonwealth. She now serves on the Global Program Management team at Jacobs, where she supports complex infrastructure programs and climate aligned mobility initiatives around the world.
