

Courtney Brunson is an advocate for economic mobility and opportunity. She currently works as the Director of the Racial Wealth Gap Partnership, a 40+ member, cross-sector group convened by the Boston Foundation whose purpose is to increase wealth for underserved, underrepresented, and historically marginalized households in the Greater Boston area.

Her career has focused on promoting and protecting economic equity for and access to disenfranchised communities. This includes her impact litigation, legal aid, and client consulting work in the areas of fair housing, labor and employment, and campaign finance and ethics law. It also comprises her local, state, and national policy advocacy and community engagement experience at nonprofit organizations and federal legislative offices.

Courtney has been quoted in the Boston Globe, Boston Business Journal, Worcester Business Journal, and Harvard Law Today for her economic policy insights and work. In her spare time, you can find Courtney visiting a local restaurant, relaxing on the beach, or traveling abroad.
